An annotated Checklist to the Beetles of VC55

Special thanks and respect must go to Derek Lott, who had solely been responsible for maintaining the database for many years on which this checklist draws so heavily upon. Forever helpful to all, regardless of ability or knowledge Derek was always happy to give advice on his favourite subject. Ever enthusiastic to promote the study of our beetles using any means he could. Although perhaps not quite up to Derek's standard, it would be nice to think this checklist gets his approval and we are doing our bit.

First edition March 2015, included all known records to the end of 2014 GL Finch.

Revised edition February 2018, includes an additional 9200 records to end of 2017 GL Finch.

Listronotus elongatus

This South American weevil has been introduced to areas of the River Soar (specific location/s are not yet known). This biological control in an attempt to combat the ever-increasing threat of Floating Pennywort Hydrocotyle ranunculoides, which itself originates from Central and South America. The operation is being overseen and monitored by The Canal & River Trust working with the Centre for Agriculture and Bioscience International (CABI). There are areas of the R. Soar that are completely choked by this plant, especially around Barrow upon Soar.

Introduction

This publication is an attempt to provide as near a complete catalogue of the beetles that have been recorded in VC55 (Leicestershire & Rutland) to the end of 2023 as possible. It systematically follows the 2nd edition of the "Checklist of Beetles of the British Isles, A.G. Duff 2012. Anyone who does not have this latest edition of the checklist is thoroughly encouraged to get it. The majority of the records are from the original database of Derek Lott (approx. 65.000 up to early 2011) who for many years was our county recorder and meticulously maintained this database and was personally responsible for adding just under half of the total of all the records.

To try and assign some kind of evaluation to this speciose order, according to Duff 2018 a total of 4131 species have been recorded in the U.K. while approximately 2000 species have been recorded in VC55 to present date. Some of the species on our list will doubtfully ever be recorded again, mainly having been affected by the massive losses and change to their habitat. Buddon Wood is probably the one that springs to mind foremost with the loss of the woodland leading to the extinction of the red wood ant Formica rufa colonies then in turn the loss of the beetles that were associated with them. However, we are also in a period of climatic adjustment, which is creating not only losses but also providing new additions and range extensions, particularly from the south and west. There has been an impressive array of species added to our county list over the last few years and it looks like beetle recording seems set to continue to flourish for some time to come. We now have 97601 records in the database (February 2024) on first impression this does sound a lot but remember the time span of recording is well over 200 years. From the late 1700's to present there have probably been no more than 40 individuals that have taken on the study of Coleoptera in a serious manner. 97601 records over such a period now does not seem so high, despite the epic labours put in by those individuals. The truth is the number of species is so high, the area so large (comparatively) and the recorders so few. Despite these factors Derek was working tirelessly to assemble the VC55 Coleoptera Database and in 1995 produced the comprehensive Leicestershire Red Data Book for Beetles.

Beetle recording in the county is continuing at a slow but sure pace but until we have sufficient data and the knowledge to go with it, we must rely on the three indispensable publications that Derek has left us, they are (i) Red Data Book Beetles 1995, (ii) An Inventory of key species in Leicestershire and Rutland 1997 (this does not only cover beetles) and (iii) the more recent Leicestershire Coleopterists, 200 years of beetle recording 2009. The Red Data Book set out to identify which beetles are endangered or seriously declining, to gather information on threats to individual species and their habitats, also to help to promote nature conservation in Leicestershire. Stating 342 species reliably recorded in Leicestershire and Rutland since 1970 each one is given a, coded criteria of Habitat requirements, Ecology, Status and Threats plus suggestions for conservation measures. Although this publication is fast approaching 20 years old it remains the principal guide to our more delicately balanced species. The Leicestershire Red Data Book was assessed upon the then 52.000 records Derek had at the time. No other comparable work has been undertaken to date, but such vast knowledge that Derek had demands that we must trust and use this if we want to hang on to the species we have and work to secure a favourable future for our Coleoptera. Habitat destruction and/or degradation, agricultural improvement and a general apathy towards invertebrate requirements are the main threats imposed on our beetles all of which need to change.

31 January 1997 Derek compiled An Inventory of Key Species in Leicestershire and Rutland. This included a list of 998 key species covering the plant and animal groups where information was currently available. The bulk of this information was taken from the already published Red Data Books series. Here he wrote a comprehensive introduction to the beetle section, which I have reproduced here in full.

“Beetles”

There are more key species of beetles in Leicestershire and Rutland than any other group. They undoubtedly represent a major resource for biodiversity within the county. Furthermore, many species have specialised requirements of their environment, which make them sensitive, to changes in management and useful indicators of environmental health.

As with many invertebrates, beetles have small-scale habitats. They tend to be tied less to traditional habitats such as woodland, than to specific microhabitats such as leaf litter, a certain type of dead wood or the foliage of a certain tree species. At different stages of their life cycle, they may occupy different microhabitats. For example, many soldier beetle larvae live in leaf litter, whilst the adults roam over the tree canopy.

Beetles also exhibit a considerable range of dispersal abilities. The seven-spot ladybird is a highly mobile species whose British populations are reinforced every year by huge influxes from the continent. It is very good at colonising new sites, but also often disappears from sites very quickly. On the other hand, several ground beetles and rove beetles are flightless and confined to isolated sites of well-established woodland, hedgerow, heathland and grassland. They become vulnerable to localised extinction events, because they are unable to recolonize these sites. If the present trends towards habitat fragmentation are not reversed, it can be assumed these species will form the next generation of local red data book species. Dead wood species form the ecological group which is most affected by dispersal problems. Many species are confined to areas of ancient woodland and they represent the largest single contingent of the key species list.

The list of key beetle species is taken from the local red data book. However, since its publication, 13 nationally scarce species have been added to the Leicestershire and Rutland list and these have been incorporated into the list of key species. Because of an increase in the number of records, seven species no longer qualify for inclusion in the red data book. These are included in the list of key species, suitably annotated. There is a large volume of records available for beetles, but some families are better covered than others. In the published red data book, local rarity was only used as a selection criterion for the better studied families.”

The third publication is the informative and entertaining The Leicestershire Coleopterists 200 years of beetle hunting, 2009. This book describes exactly, who was doing what from 1782 to 1981, who they were, where they went and what they collected and much more.

The Red Data Book and The Inventory of key species are both either out of print or at best difficult to get copies of, although there is a plan to get the former into a PDF format which could be made freely available. Also, as there are only twenty pages concerning beetles in the “Inventory” perhaps the same could be done here. The Leicestershire Coleopterists is still available from the Loughborough Naturalists Club.

The object of this publication is to help provide a reference to anyone recording beetles in the county and to assign some kind of status to their records. The arrangement states the species and the authority and then the number of records that have been accrued for that particular species, followed by the first and the last date it has been recorded. For species with few records approximately up to six, all the records and details are given. Grid references are specified where available however some locations are quite vague, particularly with the historic records, whatever details are there they have been given. The same applies to dates, most of the dates are very precise, but some are given in ranges, also where known, the recorder/collector/determiner name is provided.

It ought to be mentioned that all recorders will not necessarily be the determiner. This will apply mainly where Derek had several people collecting from various sites and supplying him with pitfall trap specimens for him to identify and where consultant surveyors have handed over material to be identified. Material collected in the early 90's by EJ Darby, mainly from North West Leicestershire similarly the mid 90's Stonesby Quarry records by C Kirk plus many of JT Daws records from throughout the county, the majority of these will have been identified by Derek.

I have included a complete list of A Mathews records with date and location in appendix (i) separately, as Derek was far from convinced all of Mathew's records came from Leicestershire. For completeness, where Mathews records are the only representatives of a species, I have incorporated them into the main body of the checklist but without data.

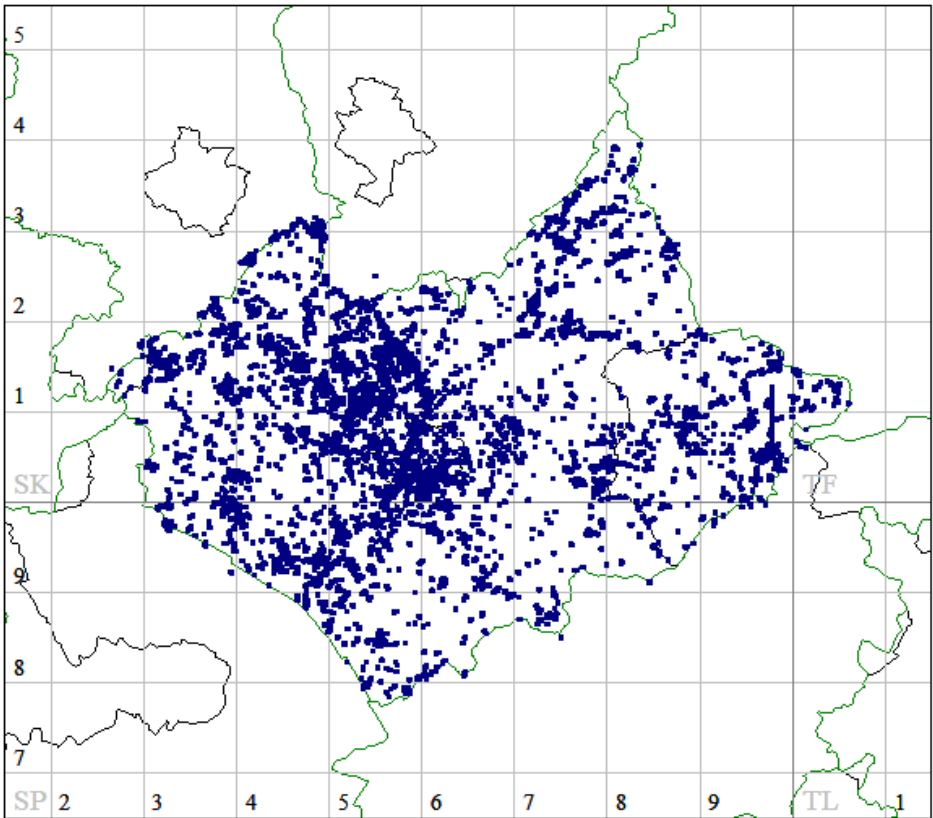

With over 200 years, worth of recording you would think we have covered the county quite thoroughly and quite evenly. Looking at the maps below in fact shows a distinct bias towards the Charnwood Forest, not surprising really, as this is without doubt an exceptional area.

The maps on the following page will show the density of species and the distribution of sites that we have records for. Both maps indicate a slight bias towards the western half of VC55. I think this suggests more the convenience in relation to active recorders, rather than the actual richness of locations. Highlighting the point that more recording needs to be undertaken over in the east.

Recorded sites

There are still enough under recorded areas to keep us occupied for a few years yet.

A note on the Leicestershire Coleoptera Recording Scheme: -

Way back in February 1984 Derek started the Coleoptera Recorders Newsletter in which he set out its intended aims, these are copied in full below. Over the following three years just three newsletters were produced describing the field trips undertaken with very detailed species lists, workshops and suggestions for the future.

Aims of the Leicestershire Coleoptera Recording Scheme

- 1) To collect records of beetles from Leicestershire into a single, readily accessible data bank.
- 2) To foster the recording of information on beetles in Leicestershire.
- 3) To publish a list of beetles recorded in Leicestershire.
- 4) To publish an atlas showing the modern distribution and status of species of beetles in Leicestershire.
- 5) To provide information and advice on the scientific interest of sites in Leicestershire with special regard to beetles.

I need to emphasise the fact that this checklist follows the 2nd Edition of the Duff 2012 checklist and consequently there are a few name changes as well as sequence changes and subsequently some names will be unfamiliar to some. Therefore, I can't overstate the importance of obtaining a copy of this checklist, which is still available as a free download from The Coleopterist <http://www.coleopterist.org.uk/checklist2012.pdf>. This edition summarises the changes, additions and deletions plus the introduction explains the whys and wherefores to these changes.

Note: - There is a new and updated version of this checklist "Checklist of Beetles of the British Isles, 3rd Edition, Andrew G. Duff 2018".
However, our VC55 Checklist follows the 2012 version.

Melanotus villosus Geoffroy in Fourcroy

There is a possibility that another species is involved (Melanotus castanipes Paykull 1800), separation of the two is not straight forward and at best difficult. Therefore, the true status of these two species will be unclear. For reference to Melanotus villosus and Melanotus castanipes see The Coleopterist Volume 13 Part 4 December 2004 pages 121 to 124, where here Howard Mendel discusses the two species.

Oulema melanopus sl Linnaeus 1758

The above species and Oulema rufocyanea Suffrian 1847 now O. duftschmidti Redtenbacher 1847 are very similar and not safely separable in the field. This problem with identification will no doubt have an effect on records for both species. For reference see The Coleopterist Volume 4 Part 2 pages 33 to 36, here Dr. M. L. Cox discusses the problems.

115 records (it is very likely most of these records will be of O. rufocyanea as this is proving to be the most common)
